gierende taxauerat, Wrt. Voc. ii. 122, 6. Perhaps the passage to which this gloss belongs is Ald. 27, 14 : Sibi usurpans tantopere taxauerat, other glosses to which are, taxauerat, i. iudicauerat hē dēmde, An. Ox. 2014 : usurpans geauligende, 7, 118; taxauerat, i. iudicauerat, possederat hē dēmde, Hpt. Gl. 454, 3. As in the Corpus Glossary the gi-form of the prefix is very rare (gi-brec, Wrt. Voc. ii. 124, 6, is the single instance, unless gierende be another), and as there is no other instance of ǣrendan (the verb is always érendian) perhaps gierende is incorrect. If, however, it is correct, it seems to be nearer in meaning to usurpans than to taxauerat.

gif. Add : Conj. introducing a conditional clause. The indicative after gif implies the certain occurrence of a circumstance, the reality of a state, &c., spoken of in the clause, admits the truth of the statement contained in the clause. Gyf þū wylt, þū miht (Mt. 8, 2) ; here it is implied that the person addressed is actually willing to act. Hū magon wē . . . gif þū his ne meaht ōr āreccan? (Dan. 133); here the inability on the part of the person addressed to give any account of the matter is taken as certain. Gif gē mē lufiaŏ, healdaŏ mīne beboda you do love me, so keep my commandments. The difference between the indicative and subjunctive after gif may be illustrated by the following passages :—Gif cyning æt mannes hām drincæð and þǣr man lyswæs hwæt gedō, Ll. Th. i. 4, 1–2 ; here the entertainment of the king is an event sure to take place, so drincæð is indicative; but the wrong-doing is quite uncertain, so gedō is subjunctive. (See also 2, 8–9.) Gif man frīgne mannan ofsleahð, 4, 6 ; but gif in cyninges tūne man mannan ofsleá, 4, 4 : for homicide was a certainty, but that it should take place in a king's town was not so. Cf. too gif frīg man frēum steld, 6, 2, with gif frīg man cyninge stele, 4, 3. Perhaps the different renderings of the same Latin words are intended to mark a change in the speaker's mind, when in Mt. 4, 3 si filius Dei es is translated gyf þū Godes sunu sȳ, while in v. 6 the rendering is gyf þū Godes sunu eart. But sometimes the distinction seems not very clearly marked. Cf. with Ll. Th. i. 4, 1–2 (v. supra): Gif mon hafaþ spere ofer eaxle and hine mon on āsnāseð . . . Gif beforan eágum āsnāse, 84, 12–14: here on āsnāse (like gedō) might have been expected. Cf. too, gif mec deáð nimeð, B. 447, with gif mec hilde nime, 452, the reference is to the same peril in each: and gif gē syndon þegnas . . . , An. 344, with gif þū þegn sié . . . , 417, the evidence of thaneship is the same in both cases. Gif ceorl būton wīfes wīsdōme deóflum gelde . . . Gif būtwū deóflum geldaþ . . . , Ll. Th. i. 40, 4–6. Agif . . . ; gif þū . . . aldres rēce . . . þū sweltan scealt . . . , gif þū wyrnest, Gen. 2654–2660: here the certainty seems to belong rather to rēce than to wyrnest. See also in Mk. gold-bleoh; n. A golden colour. Substitute: gold-bleó[h]; adj. Gold-coloured. v. gylden-hîwe.

gold-blôma. Add: A gold-bloom (v. N. E. D.), marigold (?). In favour of the meaning 'golden mass' it may be noted that blóma is not found in A. S. with the sense 'bloom', 'blossom'; and the occurrence of hordfæte and gewelegade in the passage seems to suggest that with goldblôma is connected the idea of 'wealth', 'treasure'. In favour of 'marigold' it may be said that both O. Sax. and O. H. Ger., as well as Goth. and Icel., have forms meaning 'bloom' corresponding to A. S. blóma, and the actual compound, golth-blômo = amellus occurs in O. L. Ger. (Gall. 117). Cf. too Du. goud-bloem: Ger. gold-blume: Swed. guld-blomma marigold:—Crîst se goldblôma, Bl. H. 105, 5 Se goldblôma on ðâs weorild becôm . . . þurh þone tôcyme wê wæron geweorðade and gewelegade and geârode, Wlfst. 251, 11–17. (It is the same homily in Bl. H. and Wlfst.) See next word.

grǽg-hama. Add: If the word denotes a living creature the verb gyllet would point to a bird rather than to the wolf. The verb þeótan (q. v.) and the noun geþot are the words used for the howl of the wolf, while gellan (q. v.) is used of the scream of a bird. As the epithet grǽg is applied to the mew, grǽghama might be a mew or gull. It may be noted that in the passage both birds and armour, two objects of which gellan may be predicated, are mentioned:—Fugelas singaþ, gylleþ grǽg-hama, gúðwudu hlynneþ, scyld scefte oncwyþ.

Ben. 13, 18) of ādōn peccata radicitus amputare, R. Ben. I. 15, 6. v. grundinga.

grundsōpa. Substitute: grund-sopa, an; m. The word translates cartilago in the following glosses:—Grundsopa (-suopa) cartilago, Txts. 49, 402: Wrt. Voc. ii. 13, 50. Cartilago grundsopa, coriza, sternutatio fnora, 128, 79, 80. In the glossary from which the last instance is taken the Latin words are arranged alphabetically, so that probably coriza, . . . fnora is not an independent entry but should be taken with cartilago. This supposition is made still more probable by a later gloss, where coriza occurs correctly among co- words—coriza, i. sternutatio, cartilagines nebgebræc vel fnora, Wrt. Voc. ii. 135, 77. According to these two glosses cartilago should have much the same meaning as coriza (v. nebgebræc), and so too should grundsopa. This meaning would not be far from that given for the word in Prompt. Parv.—growndesope (growndsope, grounsop) of any lycoure fex, sedimen, a meaning belonging also to Dutch grondsop. Apparently a different meaning is given to the word in another M. E. vocabulary. In a list 'Nomina arborum et earum fructuum' are these consecutive items—Cortex bark; liber, interior pars corticis; suber, intima pars corticis; abdomen grundsope, Wrt. Voc. i. 229, 24–27. Elsewhere (Wrt. Voc. i. 200, 46) abdomen is explained by pinguedo porci: could abdomen in the previous case refer to exudation on the bark of a tree? [Cf. grurzapa cartilago, Gall. 121.]

grund-stān. Add: A ground-stone (v. N. E. D.):—Grundstānas cementa, i. petre, Wrt. Voc. ii. 130, 64.

heáfod-segn, es; m. An ensign having a head (not a flag?):—Hêt þã in beran eafor heáfodsegn, ... helm, herebyrnan, gûðsweord, B. 2152–4. These are the 'feówer mædmas' (l. 1027), given to Beowulf by Hrothgar, of which the first is elsewhere (1021–2) described as 'segen gyldenne, hroden hiltecunbor'. It would seem, then, to have been an ensign, which had at the head of its shaft (hilte) the figure of a boar. Perhaps the poet of the Exodus had the same kind of ensign in mind where he says that the tribe of Judah, 'Hæfden him tô segne ... gyldenne león,' Exod. 319–21.

heáfod-slæge. Add: , -slege a cross-beam resting on columns, an architrave (?); and for 'Cot. 50, Lye' substitute Wrt. Voc. ii, 20, 58.

heals-fang. Substitute: A legal payment of varying amount according to the status of a person, to be paid by him as a due or fine, or to be received by him or on his account for injury done to him. (1) to be paid as a due:—Medemra þegna heregeata: hors and his gerǽda and his wǽpn oðde (in L. H., et suum hal[s]fang, 559, 7) his healsfang (halsfangc, v. l.) on Wessexan, Ll. Lbmn. 358, 14. (2) to be paid as a penalty:—Gif for godbótan ieohbót árísed, swá swá wíse woroldwitan tó steóre gesettan, þ gebyred . . . for woroldsteóran tó godcundan neódan, hwílum be wíte, hwílum be wergylde, hwílum be halsfange, Ll. Lbmn. 258, § 51. (a) where it is the heals-fang of the payer:—Gif fríman an ðane forbodenan tíman [wyrce], sió hé healsfange scyldig . . . Gif ceorl búton wífes wísdóme deóflum gelde, hé sié ealra his ǽhtan scyldig and healsfange. Gif bútwú deóflum geldaþ, sión hió healsfange scyldigo and ealra ǽhtan . . . Gif mon his heówum in fæsten flésc gefe, frigne ge þeówne halsfange álýse, Ll. Lbmn. 13, 11–21. Gyf freóman freólsdæge wyrce, þonne gebéte þ mid his halsfange (decem solidos persoluat, Inst. Cnut.), 342, 26. Gyf hláford his þeówan freólsdæge nýde tó weorce . . . gylde lahslit se hláford mid Denum, wíte mid Englum (dominus det halsfang, Inst. Cnut.), 345, 1. Gyf hwá on leásre gewitnesse openlíce stande . . . gylde hé þám cingce oðde landrícan be healsfange (persoluat regi aut domino terre x solidos, quod Dani uocant halsfang, Inst. Cnut.), 338, 24. Reddat regi . . . helsfang, 557, 10. (b) where it is the healsfang of the injured person:—Gif man æt unlagum man bewǽpnige, forgilde hine be halsfange (x sol. ei emendet, Inst. Cnut.; halsfangium eius emendet, 606, 12); gif hine man gebinde, forgilde be healfan were, 350, 15. ¶ It formed the first part of the compensation (wer) paid to the friends of a slain person, and it is in this connection that most detail is given, the amount, time of payment, and recipients of the healsfang being stated:—Twelfhyndes mannes wer is twelf hund scyllinga . . . Gif man ofslægen weorðe, gylde hine man swá hé geboren sý. And riht is ðæt se slaga . . . finde wærborh . . . þonne þæt gedón sý, ðonne ræ̆re man cyninges munde . . . Of ðém dæge on .xxi. nihtan gylde man lxx. scill. tó healsfange æt twelfhyndum were. Healsfang gebyred bearnum, bróðrum and fæderan; ne gebyred nánum mǽge ðæt feoh búte ðám ðe sý binnan cneówe. Of ðám dæge ðe ðæt healsfang ágolden sý on .xxi. nihtan gylde man ðá manbóte . . . 392, 3–23: 190, 10. Further details concerning the healsfang in the case of the ceorl may be gained from the laws of Henry I, which show that the healsfang was part of the wer:—In omni weregildo debet halsfang primo reddi, sicut were modus erit . . . Qui natus sit ad iiii. libras [= twihindus homo] . . . halsfang eius sunt v marc, que faciunt xii. sol. et vi. den. Si quis ad iiii. libras persoluendus occidatur, et ad id res ueniat, ut precio natalis eius componendus sit, primo debent reddi xii. sol. et vi. den. et in wera numerari. Reddantur uero patri uel filio uel fratri . . . et ipsi diuidant inter se. A die qua wera uadiata est in xxi diem debet halsfang reddi, et hoc indiuisum habeant a ceteris . . . reddatur vii sol. et vi den. ad expletionem xx sol. (i. e. the healsfang (= 12s. 6d.) + 7s. 6d. made the first pound) [Then three successive pounds were to be paid, making four pounds in all, the amount of the slain man's wer], 581, 8–582, 17. According to the laws of William I the widow of a slain man shared (or received) the healsfang, 498, 499, § 9. [Heals-fang means literally the seizing by the neck or throat (collicipium is the rendering of the word in the old Latin version of Cnut's Laws, Ll. Lbmn. 339, 24: 343, 25). Cf. the passage in Beowulf, where in the description of such an action heals and fón are used: Fýrdraca . . . ræ̆sde on þone róf an, . . . heals ealne ymbeféng biteran bánum, 2691. Its formation may be compared with that of feax-fang (an action to which the law attached a penalty), a word which with the similar berd-fang is found in the Frisian laws. In these laws, too, is mentioned the offence of seizing by the hals (Huaso orem grypt oen syn hals, dat di adema hor ut ner in mey), to which the term heals-fang might very well have been applied in Old English. As in the Old English legal phraseology the word which denotes an offence denotes also the fine which is to be paid for that offence, healsfang in the first instance might have denoted the action, then the fine paid for the assault, and then, like wergild, have come to be regarded as a standard for fines in the case of other offences (cf. first passage under (2) above:—Hwílum be wergylde, hwílum be halsfange). And it may be noted that in two of the instances where a fine is determined by healsfang the offences involve violence, unlawful disarming, and manslaughter. Halsfang occurs in Frisian law, but its meaning is not defined. Richthofen explains it as a 'Menschen- oder Mädchen-raub'. The word occurs in Icelandic, as well as a verb háls-fengja, meaning respectively an embrace and to embrace.]

heal-stán, healstan (P), helsta (P) [v. heall a stone. Cf. Icel. hellu-steinn a flat stone; Hall-steinn (a proper name). Perhaps the word, which seems little used, occurring only in glosses, may have ceased to be recognized as a compound, and the vowel of the second element may have been shortened. In this case it is possible that healstan may have been taken for the oblique case of a weak noun healsta (cf. (?) flán, flá), and this might account for the form helsta, and the adjective hilsten, q.v.]. A flat cake with a hard crust, so called because of the hardness of its crust [cf. for similar terms pflasterstein in German, pavé in French, for a hard kind of cake], a crust:—Crustula similis haalstaan (crustalla halstán), Txts. 55, 604. [Horses were used by those who had to journey or whose business required them to move about; for the drawing of vehicles in which either people (especially invalids (?) v. under wægn, Bd. 3, 9: Lch. ii. 30, 29: and see hors-bǽr) or goods (v. lād; III) were carried; and as beasts of burden (v. Ll. Th. ii. 298, 23 supra: seám-hors). They were used, too, in hunting. When the Danes came Byrhtnoth seems to have been hawking: He lēt him of handon flegan hafoc, By. 7; the huntsman of Ælfric's Colloquy receives a horse from the king (Coll. M. 22, 35 supra); and from the story in Bd. 5, 6 (supra) it seems that racing was not altogether unknown at a very early time. But if a passage in Alfred's translation of Boethius describes English feeling, riding as an amusement was little known (v. rīdan). In war, too, and in farming horses were less used than in later times. In the Chronicle under the year 1055 (v. supra) a defeat of the English is attributed to their being on horses, a mode of fighting which according to Florence of Worcester was 'contra morem'; and Byrhtnoth, who bids his men drive away their horses (By. 2 supra), himself alights (By. 23). According to the colloquy ploughing was done with oxen, and the difference between the English and Scandinavian practice may explain the reason for Alfred's noting Ohthere's account of the use of horses in ploughing (Ors. 1, 1 in Dict.).] v. ge-stēd-, rād-, seám-, stōd-hors.
