líman to join. [v. N. E. D. lime to cement.] v. ge-líman(-ian); líming.

limb-stefning. The gloss at Wrt. Voc. i. 61, 46 is: Peripetasma limb-stefning. Comparison with 26, 6, limbus stemning vel hem, suggests (?) that the gloss should read, peripetasma, limbus stefning.

lím-fín, e; f. A lime-heap:—Ðanon on gerihte on cyneges límfíne, of ðǽre fíne niðer, C. D. B. i. 518, 41. Cf. wudu-fín.

-limpfull, -limplǽcan, -limplic, -limplícness. v. ge-limpfull, &c.: limplíce. Add: v. ge-limplíce.

lim-rǽden. The passage where this word is given as a gloss to chlamide is: Pro chlamide, quam angelicae puritatis liniamento . . . adsciscebat, Ald. 35, 10. In Wrt. Voc. ii. 79, 47, which refers to the same passage, liniamento is glossed by lim-gelecg: it is probable, then, that lim-rǽden is a gloss to liniamento rather than to chlamide, and has the same meaning as lim-gelecg (q. v.).

lim-wérig. Add:—Limwérigne, Txts. 126, 16.

lín. Add:—Liin manitergium, Txts. 76, 634. Lín, Wrt. Voc. ii. 55, 42. Hí befealdan hí mid líne voluant crucem sindone, Angl. xiii. 421, 808. Hé onfénġ líne (linteum) and hine mid begyrde, Hml. A. 155, 92, 103. [v. N. E. D. line.] v. bisceop-heáfod- (not bisceop-, heáfod-) lín.

M. 20, 291', was a crime whose prevalence justified the attention given it by the law. To guard against the disposal of property acquired by it, the sale of cattle was allowed only in the presence of witnesses, and when security was given as to rightful ownership. v. Ll. Th. i. 276, 7–16: 282, 24–28: 296, 1–2. If a man returned from a journey not undertaken for the purchase of cattle, and brought some back with him, he was obliged within five days of his return to give notice of his purchase to the proper authority. v. Ll. Th. i. 274, 23–276, 5. Regulations were made for the tracing of stolen cattle (Ll. Th. i. 352, 3–13), and the oaths to be taken by those engaged in a suit concerning stolen cattle were fixed by law. v. Ll. Th. i. 178, 10–180, 16. An instance of cattle-stealing is mentioned in C. ram-hund. Add: The true form of the word, which is given only in comparatively modern MSS., is doubtful. Rain-, raine-hound, as well as ram-hundt, occur (v. Ll. Lbmn. 626, 2), and these seem to represent the original word more nearly than does ram-. In a MS. of much earlier date (13th cent.) it is said: Canem, qui in pluuia sine alicuius cura, uigilat, quem Angli dicunt renhund (rēn-, regn-? or could ren = ærn. Cf. ren-degen), xii d., Lbmn. 367, n. Liebermann suggests that the correct form would be hrán-hund, a reindeer-hound, but as in the same passage the payment for a slain greyhound is lxxx d., it seems hardly likely that any kind of deerhound could be compensated for by so small a sum as xii d. It is also said: Si quis canem, qui custodire domini sui caulas et lupum abigere, occiderit, persoluat domino canis vi sol. Perhaps the rain-hound was an outdoor watch-dog? or a house-dog?

In the two instances of its use in which from the context the character of the object denoted by the word may be to some extent inferred, the meanings seem different. In Wrt. Voc. i. 81, 23 it occurs in a list of words connected with the fabric and furniture of a church, chorus chor, gradus stæpe, indicatorium æstel, scabellum sceamul; in Past. 9, 1–3 it is associated with a book. As the word seems adapted from Low Latin astella, a chip, plank, board, in each case some kind of board may be intended; in the former a notice-board (?), in the latter a board used in the binding of a book, on which the title of the book was inscribed (cf. Latin index = title of a book). For a description of binding see Rä. 27 and Jn. L. p. 188. From the latter, as throwing light on the value of Alfred's æstel, may be quoted the following: 'Hē gesmiodade ðā gehrīno ðā ðe ūtan on sint, and hit gehrīnade mid golde and mid ginimum æc mid suulfre ofergylded fāconleás feh.' See a paper by E. J. Thomas in Camb. Philol. Trans. 1916. [*N. E. D., D.
